

As you learned today on your field trip, people of the time who lived on plantations would communicate through letters—forget cell phones and instant messaging! Handwritten letters produced with ink and quill would be sealed and hand-delivered. Pretend that we still live this way and write a letter to one of your friends or family members telling them all about your experience on the field trip.

Here are a few ideas of what to discuss with them:

- δ Your favorite part and why
- δ What surprised you and why
- δ How people lived differently then
- δ What you thought of the house's decoration
- δ What you want to learn more about
- δ If you would like to live during that time and why
- δ What people did for fun during those times
